PREFACE

TO THE GLASGOW EDITION.

Of this new Abridgment of Ainsworth's Dictionary, it will not be necessary to give any very lengthened or detailed account. The plan was suggested by the Proprietor, who considered, that, if he furnished the Tyros in Latin with all that was required for them in a convenient form and at little more than one half the usual price, he would do a service to the community. With this view, he has spared no expense, and the Editor has exerted his best efforts, that the Work may be both complete and accurate.

In the English and Latin part, the Editor was to retain the best Latin words and expressions; but to exclude all which he might judge superfluous or inappropriate. At first sight, the last appeared easy, but was found often difficult. It frequently required much consideration before a choice could be made of the words to be retained, and those that would fall to be blotted out. In several instances, many suitable words or expressions were added, for which the Editor is, of course, responsible. Abridgment formed an essential part of the plan, yet it was not intended to suppress any thing which, to the young scholar, was of importance. Studying particular the interest of the latter, and trusting to the liberality of the Proprietor, the Editor has allowed this part of the Work to remain considerably more extended than we either wished or anticipated.

With respect to the Second Part, nothing was expected from the Editor except removing all the Latin examples. To accomplish that, little time or mental exertion seemed necessary. As he proceeded, the duty required deeper thought and more anxious consideration, than would have been previously imagined. Of the explanations, many were nearly synonymous, others did not depend on the proper meaning of the word under discussion, but on the other terms with which it was conjoined in a particular sentence. To change such translations, and to adhere as closely as possible to the original meaning, was judged a benefit to the young student. Too many senses given to one word often bewilders the unstored mind, particularly at first, and with boys of slow capacity. Perhaps the Editor might without injury to the Work have carried retrenchment in this respect still further, had the original design permitted.

In the inflections of verbs, especially those of the first conjugation, every classical scholar knows, that Ainsworth varied his mode as the work proceeded. Towards the beginning, he gives only the first and second persons singular of the present of the indicative active, leaving the scholar to infer that the verb is regular, a supposition which, in some instances, would lead to mistake, yet no blame can attach to him. The fault lies with the lexicographer. As the Author advances, he frequently gives the first person singular of the present of the indicative, and the present of the infinitive. It may be added, that in the passive voice, he sometimes has only the first person singular of the present of the indicative, in others the present of the infinitive is likewise given, and not unfrequently the perfect participle. To obviate these difficulties, extremely perplexing to the weak mind, all the verbs are fully conjugated. From his own experience, the Editor knows it will save much labour both to Teacher and Scholar. To adjectives which are irregular in declension, the genitives are almost uniformly subjoined. Adverbs are frequently compared, and their roots inserted; the same method has been followed with adjectives, unless when they fall under general rules. Several other alterations have been introduced for the sake of the young Latin scholar, which the Editor hopes will meet the approbation of the candid and impartial judge.

Of the other improvements, whether from supplying omissions or correcting inaccuracies, some perhaps original, or the effect of careless printing, the Editor shall say nothing. What to the advanced scholar may appear trivial, to beginners may be of important advantage, by quickly solving a difficulty, or superseding tedious and sometimes fruitless research, exceeding the power of their intellect.

Considering the smallness of the Volume and nature of the Work, some may be of opinion that greater detail has been given than propriety demanded. The Editor has only to add, that, for the sake of the learner, he has neglected nothing which accurate and complete information, or readiness of consultation appeared to acquire.

From the great reduction in size, the public may be apt to suppose that there has been not only an abridgment of the articles, but a diminution of their number. On examination, the reverse will be found to be the case; for several additional articles have been inserted, which will not be found in former Editions, but were deemed necessary to complete the intention of the Editor.

J. D.

Glasgow, 1st January, 1830.

NOTE

BY

THE AMERICAN EDITOR.

The object and plan of the present work are so fully developed in the preceding preface, as to render any farther remarks in relation to them quite unnecessary. It was believed by the American publishers, that this dictionary would be an acceptable present to the young scholars of our country, and would supply a deficiency which had long been felt. In order, however, to render the volume as useful as possible, various additions have been made. The Roman calendar, and several tables have been prefixed to the English-Latin part; and at the end of this portion of the work will be found some remarks on the Latinization of Proper Names. Observations on synonymes, &c. are interspersed throughout the second part of the volume, and are marked by brackets. A dictionary of Proper Names is also added, with corrections and improvements, from the work of Dr. Nuttall. In this last division, the object of the editor has been, as will readily be perceived, to blend conciseness with accuracy, and to furnish the young student with an outline which severer studies on his part should one day fill up.

N. B. The quadrantal is the same as the amphora. The cadus, congiarius, and dolium, denote no certain measure. The Romans divided the sextarius, like the libra, into 12 equal parts, called cyathi, and therefore their calices were called sextarius, quadrantes, trientes, &c. according to the number of cyathi which they contained.

N. B. The Roman Ounce is the English Avoirdupoise ounce, which was divided into 7 denarii and 8 drachmæ, and, as they reckoned the denarius equal to an Attic drachma, the Attic weights were one eighth heavier than the correspondent weights among the Romans.

The Greeks divided their cotilus into chalci and lepta or minuta, some into 8 chalci, and every chalcus into 7 lepta, but others divided it into 8 chalci, and each chalcus into 8 lepta.

* The Romans divided their months into three parts by Kalendæ, Nonæ, and Idus. The Kalendæ (Kalendæ) were so termed from as Kalendo verb calare, to call over, and were on the first day of the moon or month; for Romulus began his months on the first day of the moon. On this day, one of the inferior priests used to assemble the people in the capitol, and proclamare call out to them, that it was new moon, naming at the same time the number of days between the Kalendæ and the Nonæ. This was done because it behoved the people, who lived in the country, to assemble in the city on the Nones of every month, in order to be informed by the Rex Sacrorum of the feasts and holidays; and to learn in general, what they had to do in regard to sacred matters, during that month. The Nonæ (Nonæ) were so called, because, counting backwards, there were nine days between them and the Ides. In March, May, July, and October, the Nones fell on the 7th, but in the other months on the 5th. The Idus (Idus) were so called from the obsolete verb iduare, to divide, because they divided some, and nearly divided others, of the months. In March, May, July, and October, the Ides fell on the 15th; in the other months on the 13th. It is to be observed, that the Romans in computing their time, always included the day from which, and also the day to which, they reckoned; thus they called the 1st of January, Kalendæ; the 31st of December pridie Kalendas (or Kalendarum;) the 30th, not secunda, but tertio (ante) Kalendas.

† In reckoning the days of their months, the Romans counted backwards. Thus, the first day of the month was, Kalendis or Ipsis Kalendis, and the name of the month either follows as a noun in the genitive singular, or else as a plural adjective agreeing with Kalendis. The 3d of the month is so many days before the Nones; and after the Nones, each day is so much before the Ides. After leaving the Ides, each day is so much before the Kalends of the next month.

‡ Every leap-year, (called in Latin Bissextile,) in which February has 29 days, both the 24th and 25th days of that month are written, Sexto (ante) Kalendas Martias. Hence the name Bissextile, i. e. Bis sexto Kalendas Martias.

* These numbers show how many of each denomination it takes to make one of the next following.

† Quadrans signifies a quarter of an as; triens, a third; teruncius, three unciæ of brass, (12 of which made an as,) or a silver coin of that value; libella, a diminutive of libra, being equivalent to the as, which originally weighed a pound; sembella, semi-libella; sesterius, two asses and a half, from semis tertius, i. e. the first as or, the second an as, the third a half or; quinarius, five asses, called also Victoria as, from the image of Victory, its usual device; denarius, ten asses.

‡ The silver is reckoned at one dollar, eleven cents, and one sixth of a cent, an ounce; and the gold at seventeen dollars, seventy seven cents, and seven sixth's of a cent, an ounce.

§ Marked L.I.S. (i. e. Libra, Libra, Semis, a pound, a pound, a half-pound, or two pounds and a half,) or IIS, which is commonly written HS. The Romans usually computed sums of money by sesterii, or sestertia. Sesterium is the name of a sum, ten of a mile. When a numeral adjective is joined with sesterii, it means just as many sesterces; thus decem sesterii=10 sesterces; but when it is joined with sestertia, it means so many thousand sesterii; thus, decem sesterita=10,000 sesterces. If a numeral adjective of another case is joined with the genitive plural, it denotes so many thousand; as decem sesterium=10,000 sesterii. If a numeral adverb is joined, it denotes so many hundred thousand; as decies sesterium=ten hundred thousand sesterii. If the numeral adverb stands by itself, the signification is the same.

AINSWORTH'S

ENGLISH-LATIN DICTIONARY.

A or an, before a vowel, is an article prefixed to nouns, and used in a vague sense to point out one single thing of the kind; in other respects it is indeterminate: nor is it otherwise expressed in Latin than by the singular number of the nouns or adjectives; as a dog, canis; an eagle, aquila; a man, homo.

Abaft [adv.] a targa, a poppi, poppim versus.

To abandon, derelinquere, desercre, destituere.

Abandoned, flagitiosus, infamis.

Abandonment, desolatio, destitutio.

To abase, dejicere, deprimere.

Abasement or abasing, dejectio.

To abash, ruborem alicui incutere, confundere, consternare.

To abate [act.] detrahere, decrere, minuere; [neut.] decrescere, languescere, quiescere, mitescere, desinere.

Abatement, detractio, diminutio.

That [a pronoun demonstrative] ille, is, iste.
That [who or which] qui.
Note, this is an improper use of the word, since it can only be used as a relative pronoun when it forms the nominative to a verb, or is governed in the accusative by a verb. Besides it wants the distinction of gender.
The same that or as, idem ac, atque, et, ut.
That [a conjunction] ut, quo, quod.
Note, 1. That, signifying because, and denoting time past, when it comes before a verb, may be rendered into Latin by quod; as, I am glad that you are returned safe, quod te incolumem redisse gaudeo. But that, signifying as the end that, denoting time to come, and coming before a verb, which signifies to desire, fear, command, labour, take care, &c. must be made by ut; as, I desire that you will egg the play, ut te lubidem agas, rogo.
Note, 2. That quod and ut may generally be better omitted, if the verb immediately following them be put in the infinitive mood, and its nominative case changed into the accusative; as, They say that he manages his own business, sense as negatives agree dicunt, se rem suam bene agere. Stating that or since that, cum, quum, quando, quoniam. Inasmuch that, adeo ut. So that, dum, dummodo. To the end that, ut, ne. Thatch, culmus, stipula. To thatch a cottage, &c. culmo, &c. culmen tegere. A thatcher, qui casas culmo tegere solet. A thane, gladii v. siris resolutio. To thaw, ait. regelare. The, before a noun substantive, may, for the most part, be omitted in translating into Latin, as being sufficiently included in the noun itself; except it denote the particular thing mentioned before, and then it is to be translated by hic, ille, iste; according to the gender of the substantive, and the particular thing thereby referred to, whether this, that or the other; or when it is emphatically used to show that some person or thing is more than ordinarily remarkable; as, Alexander the Great, Alexander ille Magnus. The self same person, eadem ille ipse. Then the same excellent man— Tum ista vir optimus— The one—the other, unus—alter; alter—alter. The first, the second, the third, primus, alter, tertius. From one end to the other, a principio ad finem. From the one to the other, ultro citroque. The, before a comparative degree, including in it by how much, by so much, is to be made by quanto, tanto; quo, eo, hoc; tam, quam; ea. The longer he is absent, the more I miss him, quanto diutius abest, tanto magis eum desidero. A theme or subject of a discourse, orationis argumentum v. thema. A theatre [place for acting plays in] theatrum. A little theatre, theatriolum. Theatrical or theatrical, theatralis. Theatrically, in modum theatralem. Then [at that time] *tum, tunc. To which end, cui, quorsum, quem ob rem, quamobrem.
To set in that is to say, nempe, scilicet, videlicet.
To be, before a noun, esse, fieri, et sim, qui sim. You seem not unworthy to be first, non videre dignus, qui Iter sis. They deny it to be possible, negant posse.
To be short, breviter, ne multa, ut paucis complectar.
To be, before a participle of the preterperfect tense, is generally rendered by the infinitive mood of the passive voice; as, He desires to be thought rich, copit haberi dives. I ought to be taken down. But it may be also turned into Latin several other ways; as, They praise those things which are not to be praised, laudant ea, quæ laudanda non sunt. It is openly to be said, palam est vocale. They may seem likely soon to be spoken, dicta quique videantur turpia. He deserved to be taken up into his father's chariot, ejusmodi is fuit currum patris tollendus. He will not be fit to be sent, non erit idoneus qui mittatur.
To be, if it allows any tense of the verb sum, may be made by a participle of the future in dus; as, In this, Pompeius is to be defended, Pompeius in hâc delictendus est.
Or by the verbal adjective in bilis; as, Love is to be cured by no herbs, nullis amor est medicabilis herbis.
Or by the relative qui, and the potential mood; as, Worthy to be sent to bellow, dignus qui allegetur Asterynæ.

ON THE LATINIZATION OF NAMES.

(Classical Journal, Vol. I. p. 247, seqq.)

THE learned Huet, Bishop of Avranches, who spent a long life chiefly in reading, has left a paper published in the "Harleian," on the subject of putting one's names into Latin. The proper mode of effecting this was a matter of no small importance in the parlous times when scholars and men of science universally wrote in the Latin language, and when even narratives relative to modern history were frequently composed in that tongue: nor has it at present entirely lost its interest, since many writers upon topics of revelation in the continent, and even in our own country, embrace the practice. A summary of the Bishop's Essay, therefore, with a few additional remarks, may not prove unacceptable. The author begins by observing, that examples may be met with of the manner of introducing names derived from a foreign country, both in the historical, the Greek, and the Roman writers. The latter, however, are those, whose practice ought especially to have served as a model to modern Latinists; who would have found that the Romans universally either cited foreign names unchanged, as they heard them pronounced, or accommodated them to the genius of their own tongue, merely by giving them the Latin inflection and termination, without regarding their signification. Thus the Greek names Ἕκτωρ, Ἕκτορος, and Ἐπαμεινώνδας, implying the senses of brand, ruddy, and auxiliary, are simply declined by Plinius, Pomponius, and Eutropius: in other cases they have changed the Greek terminations of into the Latin er; as Alexander, Periander, &c. though even here the oldest form seems to have been Alexandrus, Periandrus, &c. These authorities, however, were not regarded by the moderns, who, in their Latinizations of names, followed no certain rule, but their own particular fancy. Their various methods may be thus arranged:

The most barbarous was that of giving the christian name in Latin, and the surname in its proper form; as Johannes Monlasius, Bartholomæus Grossolio, Guilielmus Ockam, Johannes Duns, Johannes Gerson.

Others, who had no surname, a common case in early times, formed one from their father's christian name, examples of which they found in their own languages: thus in English we have Johnson, Thompson, Williamson, &c. This mode of Latinization gave such names as Johannes Clerici filius, Petrus Regnardi, Franciscus Martini, Guilielmus Durandi. Sometimes the name of another relative, or of a friend, gave the appellation; as Petrus Damiani, Evardius Pompilii.

Surnames have often been taken from the castle of the person's country, added in the form of a patronymic adjective. Thus we have Guilielmus Parisiensis, Gilbertus Anglicus, Josephus Bononus, Guilielmus Brito, Otto Frisingensis. Frequently, however, it was thought sufficient to subjoin the name of the country with a preposition; as Gilbertus de Hollandia, Dominicus de Flandria, Hieronymus de Moravia, Petrus de Dacia. This latter mode was more used when the place of nativity was of small consideration; as Guilielmus Auffredinensis, Arnoldus de Villanova, Thomas a Kempis. To these patronymic surnames may be added a number derived from a fief, a bishop, an abbey, and a residence, of which examples appear in Petrus de Cassa, Leonellus de Porta Sancti Petri, Guilielmus de Valbroyale, Petrus de Vineis, Abanus de Bosco.

The majority of surnames have been taken from personal qualities, dispositions, trades, professions, and other circumstances in common life. Of these there are abundant examples in all modern languages; as in English we have White, Brown, Smith, Mason, Bold, Merry, &c. It has been a common practice in Latinizations to translate such names by equivalent terms; and thus have been produced the Latin names of Dionysius Exiguus, Oliver Maynus, Hugo Candidus, Dominicus Niger, Petrus Crinitus, Johannes Scholasticus, Petrus Comestor, Rodolphus Agricola, Jacobus Faber, Jacobus Constantius, Martius Mergator, and a number more of the like kind. But this mode, though it might seem so elegant, was in fact the source of all that ambiguity concerning the identity of persons, which is the greatest bane of nomenclature. For the Latin word being no more than whatever language the translation of the real surname was made, persons and countries became necessarily established, and no trace was left by which the case, who was known to the learned world by his writings, could be discovered to his private life and family connexions. The evil was still greater, when modern historians, who wrote in Latin, adopted this mode of transforming names, thus filling their pages with riddles or enigmas, which it is impossible to solve without a knowledge of persons and things from some other source. The excellent de Thou has been singularly lucky in this respect, and has made a particular vocabulary necessary for the understanding of his history. Without such an explanation, who, for example, would discover the terms of Encrogna, in Intercanna, or Mentga, in Ventenna?

The pedantry, that naturally accompanied the revival of classical literature, promoted this method of translating names; men of learning thinking them the only tongue of their respective countries unfit to appear in the title-page of a work of profession. Thus Erasmus both Latinized and Grecized his name of Gerard (signifying amiable in Dutch) to Desiderius Erasmus. Thus Reuchlin became Capnio; Schwartzerd, Melanchton; Des Jardins, Hortensius; Homerchin, Occolampadius; De l'Huitel, Xenius; Geisshusser, Mycronius; Grunnus, Mopsulus; Vorsterus, Portensius; De l'Oeuvre, Operarius; Vander Beken, Terrenius. Camerarius, in his first works, called himself Hortilocus; but afterwards with better judgment, returned to his true name, with an adjunct. Cornelius, a minister of Geneva, even went to the Hebrew for a version of his name, and wrote himself Sidrach. It was a much greater offence against taste to form hybrid names, composed partly of the vernacular, partly of the translated appellative. "I have often been surprised," says Hoet, "at receiving letters from James Prasser in Grunningen, from his residence of Vosbuin, dated Vosdipersa, as if the word had been compounded of the barbarous term Vaut, and the French nouery, rendered Opera, wherein the whole is a purely English word, corrupted from Woodhouse." Instances of this kind are Bothegravius, Latinized (by Sledger) into Bogravius; Buchdruwell into Regilmontius; Tauruscrode into Taurocrepius. Some refined scholars, through their attachment to antiquity, were led to quarrel with their own baptismal names, and to change them for others resembling them in sound, borrowed from the pure times of Paganism. Thus Schonerus was altered to Aganus, by Perotinus, Lycosthe, Camerius and Zonas. A Greek professor took Persius instead of Aganus. It was made one of the charges against the learned and elegant Pelarinus Jovius (or Iovius) that he had changed his christian name of Antonio for Antius; which, however, he seemed not to have done on a classical account, since Antius is a good Roman name; but it was rather in consequence of an affectation which then prevailed among those who dedicated themselves to polite literature, of assuming new names in a kind of cloistic ceremonial. Thus Jacopo Sannazaro adopted the name of Actius Syncerus, and Filippo Buonaccorsi of Callimachus Experiens. Goudelin de Saint Merita translated his proper name into Scevola, erroneously (according to Dati) supposing that Goudelin had the significations of left-handed.

To the same passion for assuming Most ascribes the prevalent practice of Latinizing names by the termination ius, in imitation of the genius gust of the Roman families; as Grotius, Benatius, Heinsius, Vossius, Lipsius, Bizelius. This he acknowledges often avoids letter, though the more simple and regular formation is no less successful very well in Maretus, Turnebus, Dousa, and others. He confesses that he himself is a defaulter in adopting the name of Huetius; but this was in his youth, and was first required by his learned correspondents. Here the Bishop of Avranches closes his remarks on this subject.

In England, the Latin writers have never, it is believed, adopted the pedantic affectations just mentioned, but have followed the simplest mode of Latinizing proper names. With respect to the two terminations us and ius, it would seem that when the staple of the name is preserved entire enough to render it easily pronounceable (as not easy to be left to the decision of the ear). The common English termination in s and ey universally forms ius; as King, Reius; Harvey, Harveius; Bentley, Bentleius: (but in a name likewise has been similarly converted; as Musgrave, Musgravius; Pope, Popius; Clarke's Homer; Hero, Herius; yet More and Pole were made Morus and Polus by the writers of their times. Perhaps, however, the English monosyllable names in general are advantageously heightened by the classifiable terminations; as Lowthius and Tooplus. Our own surnames seem do not seem to want the help; and Mackenzius, Robinsius, Wortonus, and Parsonus, may pass muster with the other "gens en se," as the French call them. As the modern taste is in general averse to pedantry, the custom prevails both in England and on the continent, for an author in his title-page to give his name in its vernacular form; as Lewis, Aiguet, &c. but the Latin termination is assumed in the oblique cases when they speak of another person; as in dedications: thus, Huetio, Hermanno; and the like. How far this violation of analogy is justified by the rules of grammar and good taste, is left to the classical critic to decide.

DICTIONUM LIBER SECUNDUS;

LATINARUM

SCILICET NOTATIONES VARIASQUE SIGNIFICATIONES

JUSTO ORDINE TRADENS

A, ab, and abs, are prepositions of the same significations, and govern the ablative case. The first is used before words beginning with a consonant; the second before such as begin with a vowel, and the last when the initial consonant to q or h; for the exceptions will respect to v and s are so very few that they scarcely merit notice. Ab is of most frequent occurrence from standing before we only of the vowels but all the consonants occasionally written a, v, and s. According to most Dictionaries its significations extend twenty; but although the English may be increased by that variety, it will be of advantage to the learner to restrict the number to three or four. Indeed this variety of meaning is not suggested or supported by the preposition, but arises chiefly from the other words of the sentence, as the following examples from Ainsworth will testify. 1 From. 2 By. 3 By means of. 4 After, next. 5 At. 6 In. 7 The turn from. 8 For that reason. 9 Out of. 10 From. 11 Against. 12 For. 13 After. 14 For on our side. 15 On. 16 With. 17 In comparison of. 18 As far as from. 19 Towards an object. 20 The moving cause, for, out of. 21 The part affected. 22 A relation to the subject. In all these instances the preposition may be translated by from, by or for. Take the same author's examples. 1 A ruina, from things. 2 Ab his, by those. 3 A spe, from hope. 4 Ab illo, from him. 5 Ab octo, by the door. 6 A mendacio, by a lie. 7 A labore, from labour. 8 A re, from the thing. 9 A Germanis, from Germany. 10 A puero, from a boy. 11 A figura, from the cold. 12 A me for me. 13 A securi, from the axe. 14 A me, for me. 15 A parte from the direction. 16 A pera, by a thief. 17 A vermiculis, from maggots. 18 Ab homine, from Rome. 19 Ab innocentia, for innocence. 20 Absentes, from here. 21 Ab oculis, from the eyes. 22 A labore, by labour.
